NANCY BUSH AND JAMES FOX

Crossing paths

InSight Gallery brings together esteemed oil painter Nancy Bush and renowned photographer James Fox in a two-person show focusing on their favorite landscape locations in Texas and New Mexico. Titled Crossing Paths, the pair uses their own artistic medium to interpret the light, mood, and atmosphere of each particular place.

“The concept of this show is grounded in perspectives, two points of view, two states, and four seasons,” says Meredith Plesko, InSight Gallery owner. “Using their individual interpretations, Nancy and James will illustrate how the land inspires the artist within each of them.”

A native Texan, Nancy Bush approached James Fox in October 2009 about this collaboration, and to her delight he agreed.

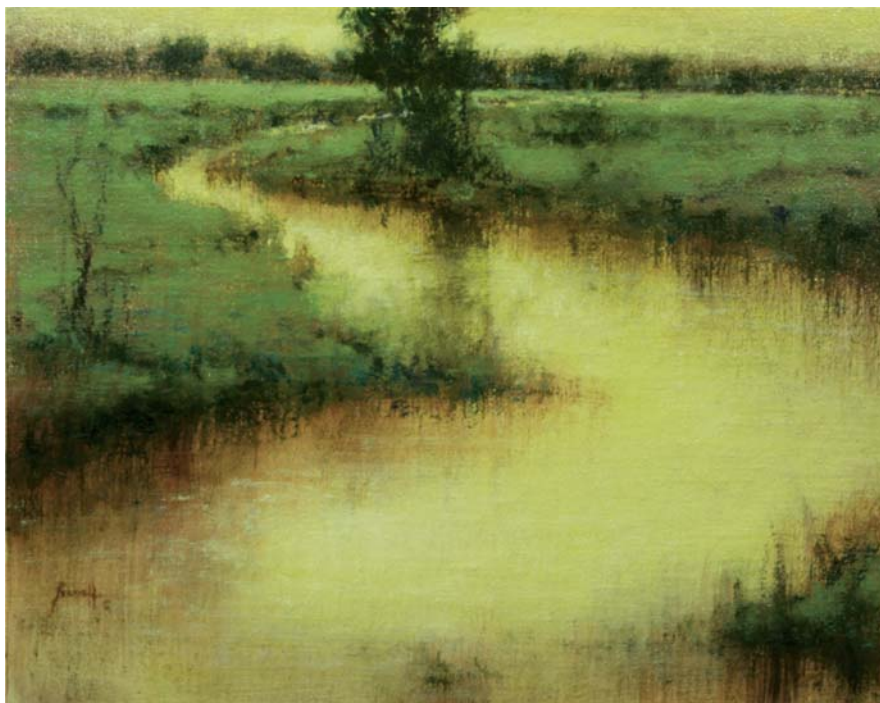

“He is such a fine artist and with such vision, I thought we could do something together that would be a representation that historically had not been done in the West by contemporary artists using completely different mediums,” recalls Bush.

A Master Signature Member of the American Impressionist Society, Bush aims to capture the spirit and emotion that unfolds before her eyes. Like Fox, she pays close attention to the subtleties that are created by the light and atmospheric conditions at certain times of day or night.

“Overall this body of work represents our quest of conveying the beauty and fragility of this beautiful part of the West that sometimes is lost in everyday life because these captured moments are very short in duration,” explains Bush. “So the click of a shutter and a hastily painted study can immerse the viewer in a lost and timeless moment in their lives and recall how truly lovely this life is.”

The Gallery Says . . .

"The concept of this show is grounded in perspectives, two points of view, two states, and four seasons. Using their individual interpretations, Nancy and James will illustrate how the land inspires the artist within each of them."

— Meredith Plesko, Owner, InSight Gallery

The similarities of both artists' work are apparent because they are drawn to the landscape within its moody and emotional context.

"I would hope that a collector notices how painting and photography are alike rather than how they are different. Both mediums express feeling and evoke emotions," says Fox. "In this show Nancy and I are pushing against some preconceived ideas of what constitutes fine art and discovering that boundaries can indeed be moved and new frontiers established." ●
